IN LOCAL MARKETS

NO WHOLESALE ADVANCE IN PRICE OF MEAT.

Fish in Good Condition and Potomac Stock Plentiful-Fruits of All Kinds.

Housekeepers are displaying more than the usual amount of interest in the meat market at this time because of the operation of the new inspection law. Dealers said today that while the law became effective last Monday, there had been no fective last Monday, there had been no for Wednesday evening. The events plan-wholesale advance in prices, such as had ned for next Thursday include a visit to been anticipated. "There is no reason why the enforcemen of the law should make such a change," a local butcher said to a Star reporter. "The strict enforcement of the regulations may make good meat a little scarce for a short while, but unreasonable prices will be inexcusable. The change merely resolves itself into a matter of enforcing cleanliness and the condemnation of meats that are really unfit for market. Some of the butchers feared the enforcement of the regulations would interfere with their business, but it will really be a benefit to the local Condemnation of Unfit Meat. "It is an easy matter for a butcher to call upon an inspector to have his meats inspected," the dealer said. "Such will have to be done when a local dealer wants to ship meat out of the city, just the same as the foreign dealers who send meat here. Meat that is unfit for food will be condemned, as it should be, and inferior meats from the neighboring states will not be permitted to be received in this city."

The dealer stated that beef is selling at about the prices it has been commanding for several weeks. Lamb and mutton are commanding higher prices than they did a short time ago, but the advance is due to the scarcity of the meat and not to the enforcement of the inspection regulations Pork products, especially loins, are higher than they were a month ago, but the increase in the prices is nothing unusual at this season. Loins of pork, the dealer said, are always in greater demand when sweet potatoes become plentiful and the increased demand is certain to cause a shortage of the choicest loins.

Fish Market Attractive.

The fish market is more attractive than t was during the summer months, the fish being in better condition and Potomac stock more plentiful. Mississippi catfish caught in the Potomac are large enough to be sold in steaks, and dealers find that "It is merely a matter of getting the people educated," one of the local dealers explained. "There are many persons who object to buying the steaks because of the name of the fish, but if the name was different the number of fish would not be anything like sufficent to supply the de-mand. The steaks sell for 15 cents a pound and the meat is as delicious as that of most of the more expensive fish."

Large quantities of rock are being caught n the Potomac and they reach here in plendid condition. The pan rock sell for 5 cents a pound, while the large rock that are used for boiling are quoted at 25 cents Very few perch are being caught in the Potomac and most of them are most too small to find sale. Trout are the cheapest fish in the local market, dealers asking 10 cents a pound for them. Bluefish are 15 cents a pound; hallbut, 20 cents, and cod, 15 cents.

Crabs Becoming Scarce.

Soft crabs are still in market, but dealers think the season for them will close in a few days, probably about the middle of next week. The supply of the shell fish today was equal to the demand and they were sold at the rate of 75 cents a dozen. the demand for oysters causing a decrease in the demand for the crabs. Hard crabs are still to be had, but they are not fat and dealers say they are hardly worth cooking. Most of the dealers think the season for hard crabs should be shortened in order that the fish might be protected and be given a chance to furnish larger supplies when they are in the greatest de-mand. Crab meat is still in demand at 30 cents a quart, and the crab flake is selling at 40 cents. Frogs are more plentiful than they were a few weeks ago.

Inquest in Hyde Case.

An inquest was held at the morgue yesterday in the case of Richard Hyde, the brakeman on the Southern railway who was fatally injured while at work in the freight yard on Virginia avenue Monday afternoon. Testimony was given by railroad employes and others to show that the brakeman was operating a coupling and that he probably failed to unfasten it, causing him to be caught between the car and engine. The jury found that the death of the brakeman was due to an accident, but expressed the belief that the present method of operating blind switches is dangerous. Part of the verdict contained a recommendation that a reform be made in the manner of conducting such work in the future.

TRUE AIM OF A MUSEUM

ITS REAL MISSION IS TO TEACH THE PROPLE

Be Something More Than a Mere Collection of Curious Things.

Engaged in a study of American museums and administrative methods, Dr. D. Randall-MacIver, an expert Egyptologist and resident of Oxford, England, visited Washington this week. Dr. MacIver was a guest of the Cosmos Club while here. He visited the Smithsonian and National Museum and saw the general method of museum administration here and studied the methods of the government in caring for and extending its collections.

Dr. MacIver is a student of Petri, as, in fact, are most of the men now engaged in the work of Egyptian excavation and exploration. He is a young man, but has none the less spent the past six years in Egyptian field work and is engaged in collection for some of the principal museums of the world. His visit to America was primarily to attend the meeting of arch-eologists held in Quebec this summer. From there he went to Chicago and thence came to Washington. He will leave here today for New York and will inspect the museums of Boston and Philadelphia before sailing

Purpose of a Museum. In speaking of the purposes of a museum as it appeared to him, Dr. MacIver said that museum methods in America are rather in advance of those in England. He said that the museum in England is still regarded as more or less of a treasure house of curiosities, and that although there were some immensely valuable collections in the British Museum, they were not arranged with a view to teaching the public what a museum could teach them, namely, along certain lines from the earliest times to the present day. He spoke particularly of the way in which the National Museum was arranged, and declared that the system of making an object lesson of each line of exhibits and showing their development up to date was to his way of think ing the real mission of a museum. In this way, he said, the public was reached and the museum taught something definite along the line in which it took the most interest, perhaps it did not understand.

He asserted, however, that he was disappointed in finding that the attitude of the government here was not so generous as he had expected toward the well-developed museums that already existed. said he had found the same tendency to starve the museums and the collections, to say nothing of the museum officials, as was too common in England. But he thought that the American museums were doing an excellent educational work and were de veloping along the lines in which they could be of the most use to the public.

Berlin's Museum Praised. Of all the foreign museums, that of Berlin, he contended, was the most advanced, and was the one toward which the government was the most generous in money matters. If there was a great scientific find or a great collection to be acquired in any part of the world, the director of the Berlin Museum was, he said, most likely to get

Referring to Egypt, Dr. MacIver said that some of the best work being done there now is by Prof. Reizner of Harvard, who is enman.
